Continue to Coventry with (time permitting) a stop at Coventry Cathedral. The Cathedral was constructed in the late 14th century and stood for centuries as one of the largest parish churches in England. During WWII, Coventry Cathedral fell victim to the brutal Nazi Blitz in November 1940, and was almost completely destroyed. Only the spire, outer wall, and the tomb of the first Bishop of the Cathedral survived the attack. The decision to “rebuild in hope, not defiance” was made the next day, and the modern cathedral was completed next to the ruins of the original Cathedral in 1962

Dinner included, and overnight

Stratford-upon-Avon, one of the most famous towns in England, is situated on the west bank of the River Avon, in the heart of the Midlands. It dates to at least Roman times, but its appearance today is that of a small Tudor market town, with mellow, half-timbered architecture and tranquil walks beside the tree-fringed Avon. This image belies its popularity as the most visited tourist attraction outside London, with eager hordes flocking to see buildings connected to William Shakespeare or his descendants
